Wildlife notes

Around June, in a good year, some of the arable fields south of the South Downs Way may show good swathes of poppies (point 4). High Park Wood (points 6 and 7) is a woodland of mixed species, including beech, sycamore, ash, field maple, cherry, whitebeam and hazel, with a wide range of ages, from young ash saplings to ancient pollarded beeches. Parts are old hazel coppice – a reminder of the days when hazel poles were needed to make sheep hurdles for the enormous flocks of sheep that once grazed the adjacent downland. The large fallen and decaying trees probably date from the great storm of 1987 and some of the plantations may also date from then.

The route

1 Leave the Half Moon pub and cross the B2116 at the end of Plumpton Lane to an unmade road opposite. Follow the track as it climbs steeply up Plumpton Bostall to the South Downs Way.

2 At the South Downs Way, turn right and follow the track west to Ditchling Beacon.

3 Cross the Ditchling Road and follow the path round the right hand side of Ditchling Beacon car park. Go through the gate, still on the South Downs Way, and after about 20 yards take a path that goes off to the left to a gateway, just before you get to the trig point.

4 Follow this path due south to a waymarker post and turn sharp right, even though the path appears to go straight on. At the next junction of paths turn left and continue south down a wide track to a large open field and valley.

8 Go through the gate and carry straight on to a stile ahead. Cross the stile and walk over the brow of the hill until you come to a waymarker post. Go left along the farm track, keeping the fence and Horseshoe Plantation to your right, until you come to Streathill Farm.

9 Continue along the farm track for about 25 yards and then take the path to your right over a stile and through a gate. Continue in the same direction with the fence on your left.

10 About half way along the field boundary take a path going diagonally to the right and follow it past a medieval enclosure up to the gate at the brow of the hill.

11 Go through the gate back onto the South Downs Way. Cross the South Downs Way to rejoin and descend Plumpton Bostall to return to the Half Moon pub.
